JACKSBORO BROUGHT UP TO DATE

The first settlers came to this region between 1840 and 1857 securing ownership of land through homesteading. At this early day the country where Jack County is now located, evidently was well covered with both sage and buffalo grass which furnished excellent grazing for the roaming herds. Many trees, such as mesquite, live oak, and pecan, which were scattered throughout the area still exist.

On May 30, 1857, a group of citizens gathered in Keechi Valley and appointed a committee to petition the Texas Government for a county organization. The State Legislature granted the right for a county to be organized and the county seat was designated as Mesquiteville. The first election was held on July 4, 1857, for the purpose of electing County officers. Only 60 votes were cast. In November, 1857, the name of Mesquiteville was changed to Jacksborough in honor of William H. and Patrick C. Jack, grandsons of Captain Jack of South Carolina. (The "Jacksborough" was not used long).

Due to continuous Indian raids the U. S. Government established a frontier military post at Jacksboro for the protection of the citizens. The first troops of the Sixth Cavalry was stationed here after the Civil War in July, 1866. The soldiers were moved to Buffalo Springs, but due to water shortage they returned to Fort Richardson where a fort was constructed. (The hospital and four other buildings of this old fort still remain in good state of repair and are being used as an armory for the Texas National Guard). The soldiers were stationed here until, as recorded in H. H. McConnell's "Five Years A Cavalryman," "Fort Richardson continued to be occupied by a small garrison until May, 1878, when the flag was hauled down for the last time, and the last wagon-load of immense supply of stores rolled out for forts . . . further west, and the last blue-coated soldier disappeared over the horizon."

Among the great disasters that resulted from the raids of the Indians were the massacre of Warren's wagon train some twenty miles west of Jacksboro which happened the next day after General Sherman of the U. S. Army had passed on an inspection tour of the various posts; then the killing of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Mason, north of where Jermyn now is. Each of these spots are now marked by monuments with suitable inscription thereon.

Many saloons existed in Jacksboro when the rougher element of the frontier had control, the principal one being located where the Fort Richardson Hotel now stands. Others were located in various parts of town, one on either side of the creek near the crossing, and a large picket building where the present flour mill now stands. It contained a large bar and a great quantity of merchandise.

The "Butterfield Stage Line" leading to California was thought to have crossed Los Creek near the present City Park. The book, "Five Years A Cavalryman," by McConnell, and Horton's "History of Jack County," and "Four Score and Ten Years" by Webb, are very interesting—all of which people of Jack County should have in their libraries. They present a beautiful picture of the country along with the fatal events.

The dark side of Jacksboro has not been overdrawn, but there still remains a bright side. In 1868 a Methodist Church was the first to be founded. In the early 1870s Rev. A. H. Jackson organized the Baptist Church. Addison and Randolph Clark from Thorp Springs organized the Christian Church, and Rev. John Brown, originally from Scotland, then organized the Presbyterian Church, and a rock building was erected by the Presbyterians about two blocks north of the Square.

A two-story picket building known as the Masonic Hall was erected about two blocks southwest of the Square, the upper story for the Masonic Lodge and the first floor for school purposes, and on Sundays for worship by the church organizations which had no buildings of their own. It was of brown sandstone, and the third of limestone, (as stated above quarried south of town).

Jacksboro, with its commission form of government, has a population of approximately 4000, this being determined by meter deposits. It is at the cross roads to west Texas, having nine cross roads and intersections. The city has more than 22 miles of paved and graveled streets; 20 miles of sewer lines; 8 miles of water mains; more than 15 miles gas line (estimated). Altitude 1084 feet; average rainfall of approximately 26 inches, and an average temperature of 64 degrees F.

Schools And Churches

Much of the influence of the early Jack County Educational Institute and the North Texas Baptist College are still felt. Jacksboro Independent School District comprises 340 square miles. It has 32 teachers; 10 busses; a cafeteria; a 40-piece school band, and an active P. T. A. The large fireproof concrete building with its beautiful location serves the high school students of the entire district. A new grade school building is now replacing the old building which has been in use for many years. This new structure will be a credit to any city whether it be great or small. The colored students are provided with stucco buildings and are served by the same school board as are the other schools. There are 931 students.

In visiting Jacksboro you may be able to attend the church of your choice whether it be Protestant or Catholic. There are twelve churches, six with full time pastors, two of which are the Baptist and Methodist colored churches. Many church schools are in operation and a new $55,000.00 addition is being constructed at the First Baptist Church for educational purposes. The Methodist church is undergoing extensive repairs.

Library

The Jacksboro Library, Inc., is composed of local women who are responsible for our 2500 volume library, the building and fixtures. All are paid for and new volumes are being added continually.

Recreation

Jacksboro has one of the nicest nine hole golf courses you will see. This course with its sand greens is owned by local members who employ a care-taker yearly. The course is always in a good state of repair; with sixty or more members it is always glad to invite new members into its organization. The local club owns its tractors, mowers and a nice little office. The land is leased by the year.

The local softball organization has a nice lighted field at Fort Richardson where people of the county can spend a very pleasant evening during the season watching the performance of local as well as other teams who are playing here. The athletic field located on the high school ground is well lighted, a good turf, and with a new stadium has plenty of seating space for those enjoying football games. Two well-equipped theatres are available.

Fishing in Los Creek, Carroll Creek and the Trinity is abundant. Lake Bridgeport to our east and Possum Kingdom Lake to our south and west are also noted for the splendid boat riding and fishing.

Transportation

Jacksboro is served by the CRI&G railroad. The railway express agency is located in an office in the Fort Richardson Hotel. The Sproles Red Ball Motor Freight Lines and two others and common carriers also handle much of the freight coming in and going out. 26 bus schedules operate in and out daily. Also, an airport located on the L. A. Worthington ranch 3 miles north of the city. This combination furnishes much transportation for passengers.

Jacksboro Of Today

As the town grew, new buildings replaced the old ones. The old court house was torn down and rebuilt with native stone quarried south of town. Work began on it in 1885.

Many new rock and brick buildings have replaced the old wooden structures for business.

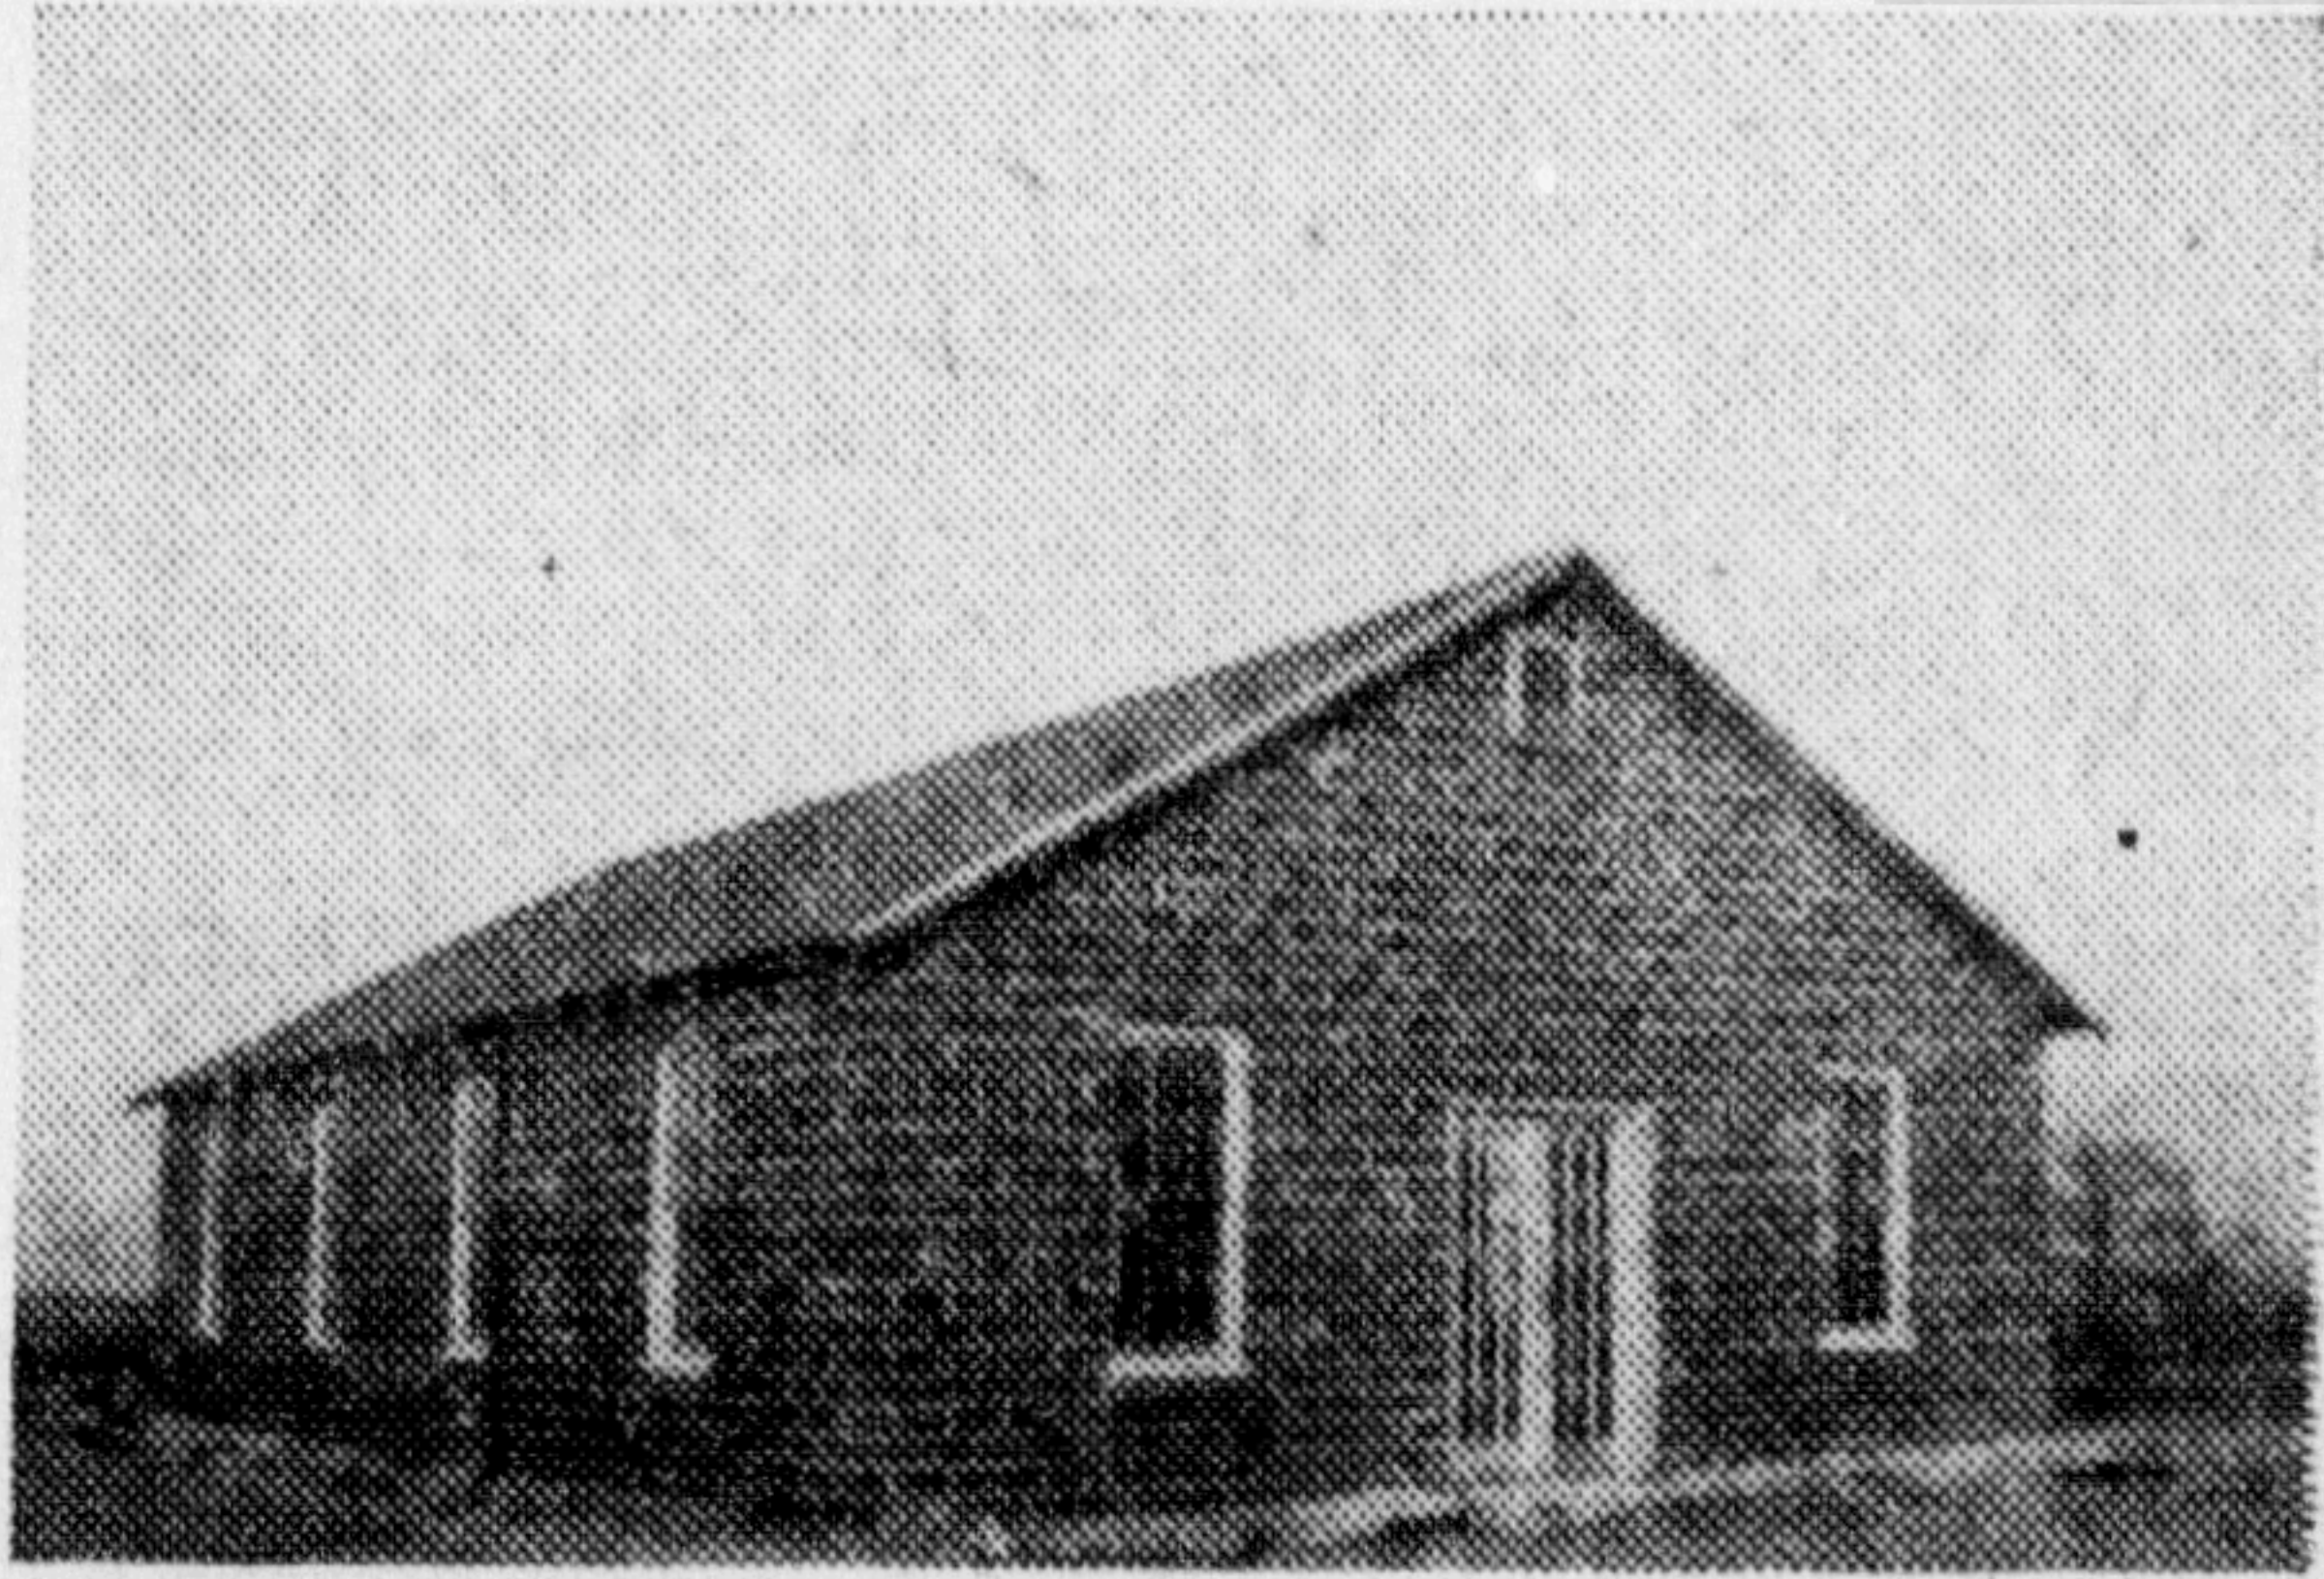

Jacksboro is a county seat town. It has one large rock crusher with a great output of stone which is quarried near the plant. Many men are employed at the crusher during its busy season. Much of the abundant crude oil of the county is refined at the Jacksboro refinery. These refined products are used locally as well as elsewhere. The flour mill in our city. The third court house has been replaced by a beautiful structure of marble and is one of the nicest buildings known anywhere. (The first court house was built of native oak sawed by the local sawmill, and was known as "rawhide" lumber"; the second elevator storage is owned and operated by the Kimball Diamond Milling Company.

The old building which the church has been using will be converted into Sunday school rooms and a place for recreation, etc. The new building was so planned that it can have an educational building added to it later when the church sees fit.

Old School Gone But Not Forgotten

THE JACKSBORO GAZETTE-NEWS

JULY 1, 1948

During the past week the destruction of the former Jacksboro elementary school was completed to make room for the new one story $300,000 building. This landmark was constructed during 1910 and opened for public instruction in 1911. Its passing marks the end of another era in Jack County.

Until 1929 the building housed all of the Jacksboro educational system. By that year the growth of Jacksboro and the consolidation of outlying districts had made it too small. Since the completion of the concrete high school building it has housed the elementary grades.

The red brick building was successor to the Jack County Educational Institute building. Prior to the JCEI, school was held in the Masonic Lodge building and other places in town.

The November 24, 1910, edition of the Gazette had this to say about the red building:

"It is two stories with basement and has a seating capacity of 800 children, and a handsome auditorium with a seating capacity of six hundred.

"The exterior of the building area.

"The exterior of the building presents a very handsome appearance indeed. It is built of Denton red brick with colonial columns enclosing the main entrance, and trimmings are of the finest Jacksboro limestone. While the building is beautiful from a distance, the interior is entirely in harmony with the exterior. Each room is well lighted, the light coming over the left shoulder of the child, and the building is steam heated throughout. In fact, the comfort and health of the school children have been the main object kept in view by the school board when selecting plans. It is on the most approved modern plan in design and finish. The floors are noiseless, and all the woodwork is finished in oak, which means it is substantial as well as beautiful.

"The cost of the building completed will be $30,000.00. The contractors are Bushnell & Johnson of Ryan, Okla."

The building was completed and opened for public inspection Monday, January 16, 1911. The many favorable comments of the visiting patrons centered on the steam heating of the school. On the night of the open house the weather was very cold and steam heating was a new convenience for Jacksboroites.

Gazette-News In 69th Year

On June 1, 1948, the Gazette started on its 69th year of service and extends appreciation for the courtesies from the fine people of Jack County.

During the summer months the paper will be printed earlier. Send in your news as soon as it happens—a postal card will do.

'We're Moving North,' First Issue From Fourth Gazette-News Home

THE JACKSBORO GAZETTE-NEWS

This week the Gazette-News is beginning a new period in its already long history. After residing in the building on the northeast corner of the Square for 65 years it is moving to the new brick and tile building next door. Work on the building began last September.

The Gazette-News is in its 68th year of publication but it was 65 years ago that it moved to the northeast corner of the Square. When founded in June, 1880, by J. N. Rogers, the paper was printed in the Springdale community and published at Jacksboro under the name of the "Rural Citizen." In November, 1880, the paper moved to the Odd Fellow Hall, on the southeast corner of the Square, here in Jacksboro. In 1883 it moved and began operating in its own building, the now white northeast corner building.

In the late '80s the "Rural Citizen" became the "Jacksboro Gazette." In 1919 J. R. Dennis bought the "Gazette" from the Rogers family and consolidated it with the "Jacksboro News." The "News" was founded in 1895.

Last Friday Mr. E. L. Thomas of Waco, newspaper mechanic, began the moving into the new building, and this week we are publishing our first edition in the new home. Friday the news press and folder were moved and tomorrow the linotype and other equipment will be moved.

Mr. Thomas has been checking the Gazette machinery for 30 years in his connection with his work over the state.

Some new equipment including an Intertype, a type-setting machine, has been ordered and delivery is expected this year.

There will be no formal opening of the new place but visitors are welcome.
